BANGOR WHIG.

WEDNESDAY, FEB. 27, 1839.

THE AROOSTOOK LANDS. We trust our Legislature will before they separate adopt efficient measures for the promotion of the settlement of the lands upon the Aroostook and St. John rivers. The proper way to maintain jurisdiction and possession of the territory will be to people it with a hardy and industrious population. There is no portion of New England capable of maintaining a more dense population by the cultivation of the soil than this same territory.

We have thought that it would be well to give to every volunteer who shall serve in our militia a suitable farm, in defending the territory, in addition to his regular pay, sufficient land for a farm, [illegible] he should settle upon it. By allowing 50 men to settle in this way upon each township belonging to the State, we should soon have a population upon it as dense as that which fills the valley of the Kennebec or Penobscot. In this way the burden of military service may be great [illegible] lightened, and our State filled with an enterprising and industrious population, that will flock in upon us from all the New-England States.

☞ Our Washington correspondent under date of the 21st, writes us, that John I. Mumford, a Deputy Collector in New York under Jah. Hoyt, is now in Washington, closeted with the locofoco part of the Investigating Committee of Congress, aiding them in making up their minority report. All this time he is acting under the direction of his master, and is receiving his pay, as Deputy Collector of New York, without being at the Custom House, in the discharge of his paid for duties.

That is the way this pure and reformed Administration do things. Is there no "popular indignation" left, since 1828, and the days of the White House letter by Benton? "Tempora mutantur, et nos mutamur in illis!"

STEAMER BANGOR The Boston Gazette of the 25th, says, "that the Directors of the Boston and Bangor Steamboat Company, have ordered the Steamboat Bangor, (now lying in that port,) to be immediately put in perfect order for business, that if application be made for her by the authorities of the State of Maine, or the General Government, for the transportation of supplies or troops to the State of Maine, her service may be obtained, and that she will be ready on the 27th inst."

Why cannot the boat commence forthwith to run to and from Frankfort? Aside from the conveyance of troops and provisions, the business would be found profitable, as the travel is now great between this city and Boston. With such an experienced and gentlemanly commander as Capt. HOWES, and such fine accommodations as the Bangor offers the travelling community, we think, prefer this mode of conveyance.

☞ We would not be suspicious, but is not the Eastern Argus cool very cool and non committal on the subject of the Aroostook War? How can it well be otherwise after its articles last fall deprecating the movements of this State.

☞ We should have stated before, that Mr. McLaughlin signed the parole of honor, and left the city on Monday.

[For the Whig & Courier]

"THE PRETENDED COMPACT."

MR. EDITOR:

The Augusta Age of the 21st inst., in an article under the above caption, undertakes, very unfairly and disingenuously, to convey the impression that the British rest their claim to exclusive jurisdiction of the disputed territory, upon an agreement made with Mr Clay, while Secretary of State under Mr Adams.

Now, Mr. Editor, this is no time to indulge in the crimination of this party or that party, of this man or that man, to say who was right and who wrong. These questions should not be discussed or settled now. We have higher and more patriotic duties to perform. Our State is threatened with invasion, and the great question of right in regard to the Boundary is in a fair way of being speedily submitted to the ultimate arbitration in such cases the trial by battle. Is it fitting that at such a crisis, when all our energies should be employed against a common enemy, and all our strength excited in a common cause, that either of our political parties should do or say aught calculated to open old sores, and aggravate them, to stir up the party prejudices, which at such times should be forgotten, and thus weaken the common cause? I think not, and for that reason was sorry to see the article in question. I have also been pained to see articles in other papers, on both sides, of a similar tendency. But as the Age has undertaken to give a history of this pretended compact, and has not done it fairly, it is right and proper that a fair and dispassionate correction should be made.

The Age says, "The British say this agreement was made with Henry Clay when that gentleman was Secretary of State under John Quincy Adams, at the time the question of our title was most foolishly submitted to the King of the Netherlands. But there is no evidence that the then administration committed the folly of making any such agreement. It has been said, and perhaps is true, that they did agree that pending the arbitration each government should continue in possession of the territory over which it then had actual jurisdiction."

The Age is right when it says there never was, in fact, such an agreement. We defy the British [illegible] the time [illegible] or by any person by whom such an agreement was made. The Age is also right in saying [illegible] does in the same article, that if such an arrangement had been made by the General Government, it would not be binding on the State of Maine.

But, sir, is or is not the language above quoted calculated to prejudice unjustly, the gentlemen there mentioned, in the eyes of the people of Maine? to convey the idea that, though they did not exactly agree to surrender the jurisdiction, yet they did something which gave Great Britain reason to infer as much; and that the only claim which they have is founded on the doings or misdoings of Adams and Clay.

Let us see what the facts are. In 1827, the very year that the question was submitted to the umpire, the Province undertook to exercise several acts of jurisdiction over the disputed territory. Did Mr Clay hold his peace, or admit their right of jurisdiction? By no means, but distinctly told Mr Vaughan, the British Minister, that such acts were "inconsistent with that mutual forbearance which it had been understood in the correspondence between us would be inculcated and practiced on both sides."

In February, 1828, Mr Clay, in a letter to Mr Vaughan, goes into an able and conclusive argument to show that the British had no right to exclusive jurisdiction. It seems their claim was then considered a thing of right, and not of contract. But Mr. Clay successfully combatted this most preposterous claim. He denied that John Baker, if guilty of any irregularity of conduct, was amenable to the Provincial Government. Our own Government alone could deal with him. He demanded the release of Baker and an indemnity for his injuries; and finally protested against any acts of exclusive jurisdiction by the British authority on the Madawaska, the Aroostook, or within any other part of the disputed territory, before the settlement of that question." Does this look as if Henry Clay had bargained away the jurisdiction of this territory?

March 17, 1828, long after the submission, Mr. Clay tells the British Minister "that he is charged again to protest against the exercise of all and every act of exclusive jurisdiction on the part of the Government of New Brunswick, and to announce to Mr Vaughan that that Government will be responsible for all the consequences, whatever they may be, to which any of those acts of jurisdiction may lead" Such was the language and such the tone of Mr. Clay during the whole administration of Mr Adams. Up to the day that he retired from office nothing can be found from which the claim of Great Britain, either as a matter of original right, or of agreement, can be found, or inferred.

The British now say that we have admitted that such an agreement was made. This I deny. But truth and candor compel me to allow that their claim was not met and repelled as it should have been, but rather favored, while Mr. Livingston was Secretary of State.

In a letter to Mr. Vaughan, July 21, 1832, he makes use of the following language:—"Until this matter shall be brought to a final conclusion, the necessity of refraining on both sides, from any exercise of jurisdiction beyond the boundaries now actually possessed, will be apparent!" So that it seems to have been admitted that England had some possession in the disputed territory over which she might exercise jurisdiction. The same gentleman, in a letter to the Governor of Maine, dated Oct. 21, 1831, refers to an "arrangement made with Great Britain for preserving the state of things as it then existed until a final disposition could be made of the question," and he added, "it was distinctly understood that no execution of the State authority in the parts of the disputed territory which were actually held by Great Britain should interfere with this agreement." Here, to say the least, is a most unfortunate admission that certain parts of the territory were held by Great Britain, over which she might rightfully exercise jurisdiction No such admission was ever made by Mr. Clay. This, however, by no means admits that we have surrendered the exclusive jurisdiction of the disputed tract to Great Britain, till the question should be settled. This monstrous proposition was never made, to my recollection, but to be promptly and fully denied, except during the time that Mr. Livingston was Secretary of State.

Mr. Stevenson, our present Minister at the Court of St. James, has repelled this claim in the most decided manner, and has maintained firmly and gallantly, the positions occupied by Mr. Clay in 1828. For this he is entitled to the sincere thanks of every citizen of Maine. Like Mr. Clay he has said nothing which gives the least countenance to this most extraordinary claim.

Mr. Editor, I maintain the following propositions

1. That no agreement was ever made, by which the exclusive jurisdiction of the disputed territory was to remain in Great Britain till the final disposition of the question.

2. That nothing was said or done by Mr. Clay, during the administration of J. Q. Adams, that gave the least countenance to such claim, and that he uniformly denied it. That if the British found their claim on any pretended or supposed admissions of this Government, those admissions were made by Mr. Livingston and not by Mr. Clay.

3. That, therefore, the Age was wrong in using language calculated to leave the impression that Mr. Clay, if any one, was to be blamed in this business.

I, sir, do not say that any one is to be censured. I have no feeling in this matter. I only wish that the facts may appear, and have therefore quoted from the correspondence of our public functionaries, sufficient to set the matter right.

As to what the Age says about Adams and Clay "having foolishly agreed to submit the question of title to the King of Netherlands." Suppose they did, is this the time to call up the matter, and indulge in language of that kind? "Foolishly entered into!" The Age editor should have known and stated that this submission was in accordance with an article of the treaty of peace, and long before Adams was President, or Clay Secretary of State, and that they agreed to no submission but such as were imperative upon them by the express terms of a treaty.

FIAT JUSTITIA.

FROM NEW-BRUNSWICK.

The accounts from Head Quarters are extremely pacific: the prisoners taken at the Aroostic, after undergoing a little restraint and an examination before the Attorney General and magistrates, have returned to Maine. We cannot however pass over this subject, which is likely to endanger the peace of the country, without eulogizing the spirit and gallantry of Mr. Dow, who has been so eminently fortunate in vindicating the jurisdiction of New Brunswick over the Disputed territory. Yes, we say it is to him and his companions alone that we are indebted for saving the British claim from the unfortunate dilemma into which the exercise of authority on the part of Maine was likely to throw it. It appears that Mr. Dow knowing of the approach of the Americans and of their unauthorized seizure of the Provision, Cattle, &c. had repaired to Woodstock with some choice men (leaving his spies to watch the motions of the enemy) and demanded arms from Colonel Ketchum, who did not feel himself authorized to give them up. Mr. Dow made his arrangements accordingly, and before next morning he and his friends had sufficiently armed themselves at the expense of the Queen, and were far on their way either to rescue their cattle and property and drive off the intruders, or give them battle, while on their way one of Mr. Dow's spies (who by the bye has shown the most consummate Generalship during the whole affair) came in about 2 o'clock at night, giving information of the illustrious arrivals at Tibbets'; Mr. Dow was up in an instant, and taking with him 15 armed men and two sleds with muffled bells, started for the spot, where he shortly arrived; his sleds were halted at a distance from the house, and in a few minutes the house was surrounded. The prisoners started up, and one rushed to the window when a glittering bayonet stared him in the face, another to the door, which a gruff looking subject had just relieved him from the necessity of opening by bursting it open, and they were ordered to put on what few cloths they had and without further parley prepare to accompany their guards to Frederickton. Col Webster demanded their authority, and was answered by one fellow, striking his musket on the floor "there is my authority." The Colonel it appears remonstrated on his own behalf as having no connection with the expedition; but he was told that he was in bad company and must therefore go along. On arriving at Woodstock, the commanding officer at Houlton came in and demanded of the Magistrates to see the prisoners, but Mr. Dow set at rest any hesitation on their part by insisting that no strangers be allowed to communicate with the prisoners; they were then put under a guard of Militia and sent to Frederickton; this we believe is the simple narrative of the affair. St. John Chronicle.

From the Frederickton Sentinel, Feb. 23.

This Province has not only been invaded by a military force belonging to the State of Maine in a time of profound peace; but invaded with the avowed determination of maintaining possession if possible, of the territory in dispute.

The question therefore must resolve itself into this Will the General Government of the Union and the other States support that of Maine in its infraction of a treaty and mutual understanding and compel it to comply with the condition of the federal compact which unites them together, or will they support her in her arrogant pretensions. This must be promptly and decidedly answered.

Meantime the course to be pursued, on the part of the British authorities in this part of Her Majesty's dominions, is to maintain inviolate the possession of territory, which by treaty and right belongs to Great Britain; and altho' war is to be deprecated and dreaded, yet it is not to be prevented by measures of expediency. We are happy to find from the tenor of his Excellency's letter, to which we have already alluded, as we should have expected from a knowledge of his character, that in his hands, the security and rights of the Province will not be lost sight of, or the honor of his country impaired.

Reinforcements for the detachments of the 36th Regt. that preceeded last week toward the scene of invasion, continue to be sent off; yesterday a company of that corps followed, and this morning the remainder, led by a party of the royal artillery with a field piece, left for Woodstock. The Crocodile, with the 69th had not arrived at St. John on Thursday. The necessity for making Fredricton headquarters, and having a disposable military force here, ready in cases of emergency, has become too apparent to be disregarded. ib.

It has been a current report (during the last three days,) that the American Prisoners, the invaders of the British Territory, were not only released upon parole, but were also invited to dine at the Government House; in consequence, however, of the excited feelings of indignation exhibited by the loyal inhabitants of Frederickton, the Americans did not avail themselves of the proffered civilities. The report was also very generally believed at Frederickton; but for the dignity and honor of Her Queen's Representative, and for the respect due to the feelings of the loyal inhabitants of this Province, we trust that the report will be found to be incorrect: that the Representative of the sovereignty of Great Britain should invite prisoners, invaders of British Soil, to dine at the Government House, appears almost too absurd to believe St. John Chron.

The Age and Argus do injustice to the Bangor Whig, Portland Advertiser, and Eastern Journal by representing them as ridiculing and opposing the action of the governor and Legislature in sending an expedition against the trespassers. These papers have never opposed the driving off the trespassers: they only expressed a feeling, which we know was not confined to the political opposition in this State, of dissatisfaction with the tardy, inefficiency and clumsy way in which some of the agents in that expedition managed the matter. However, we pass over that for the present, merely remarking that the reproof of the Age and Argus comes with a very bad grace from papers which all last summer did every thing they could to embarrass Gov. Kent in running the line, and which have to this day kept their readers in ignorance, so far as they could, of all Government's doings on the subject, not so [illegible] to the present Legislature. Believing these papers remove the mote from the eyes of the Whig and Advertiser, they should take the huge beam out of their own.

[Kennebec Jour.

☞ The following resolutions reported by Mr. Dumont, were unanimously adopted by the Whig State Convention.

1. Resolved, That in the approaching contest, we have the question fairly put to the people of this State, whether they are prepared to sustain and be governed by the principle under which this nation has gradually risen, from the situation of infant colonies, to that of a free and mighty empire, or by an abandonment of those principles, to throw aside the character of freemen, and yield submissively to the tyranny and oppression of a corrupt and profligate administration.

2. Resolved, That in the measure of the administration of the General Government, we behold a reckless disregard of the true interests of the whole people, and a truckling to the demands of an insolent junto of office holders, evincing at once a distrust in the honesty and capability of the people, and a determination to unite in the person of the Executive the combined power of the nation.

3. Resolved, That we are opposed to all subtreasury schemes that we prefer to them the system which forty years of experience have proved safe for the Government and useful to the people—that the only further "experiment" which we will agree to, is that of placing the government in the hands of honest men.

4. Resolved, That human nature is the same, whether in the old world or in the new, and that as the patriots of the revolution never had much confidence in the disinterestedness of excise officers and tax gatherers in the old world, we have reason to suspect the purity of "the party" who patronize and support them here, believing, as we do, that their principles are alike throughout the habitable globe always to "support the government" which supports them. The same pay that makes tories in one country makes them in another.

5. Resolved, That the recent defalcations of public officers are the natural results of the policy of the National Administration, and that in a numerous gang of defaulters it is difficult to establish a choice for reputation whether Swartwout or Price is the greatest federalist is not essential; their continuance in office is only additional evidence of the reckless course pursued by the administration, and the result is, as has been long expected, a reflection upon our National character, and an empty Treasury.

6. Resolved, That in the opinion of this convention, the fourth instalment under the deposite act ought to be paid to the States, as soon as the condition of the treasury will permit, and that but for the extravagant expenditures of the present administration, and the losses incurred through its dishonest agents, it might have been long since paid, without injury to the General Government, and with manifest advantage to the States.

7. Resolved, That we have undiminished confidence in the discernment and patriotism of the farmers, mechanics and working men of our country, believing, as we do, that they will never knowingly advocate a policy which pays to favored sycophants gold and silver, and to the laborer irredeemable government promises.

8. Resolved, That we recognize, to its full extent, the right of petition, and most heartily respond to the sentiment of our late excellent Chief Magistrate, "that as this right was the first to be asserted, so it should be the last to be abandoned on American soil."

9. Resolved, That the response to the call of the Hon. Ruel Williams on the Executive of the U. States, for information in relation to the adjustment of our Northeastern Boundary, is unsatisfactory, and a mere repetition of the same old story that nothing has been accomplished by the National Executive to maintain the integrity of our soil or the honor of our State.

10. Resolved, That we cheerfully extend the right hand of fellowship to that class of our fellow citizens with whom patriotism is paramount to party, and whose conservative views, with regard to national policy, have an unquestionable tendency to establish a well regulated currency, and to adopt measures in the end beneficial, and promotive of the best interests of our common country.

11. Resolved, That we recognize that democracy as genuine which seeks the greatest good of the greatest number, which is of a true and genuine coinage; and we spurn, as worthless trash, that which has, for the last ten years, known no other origin than the Executive mint at Washington.

12 Resolved, That we rejoice in the opportunity, on the second Monday of September next, to support EDWARD KENT for the office of Chief Magistrate of the State of Maine—that by his acknowledged talents, his tried patriotism, his public services, his stern devotion to sound Whig principles, and his exertions, preeminently manifested, with regard to our boundary difficulties, he is worthy of our unhesitating support, and eminently qualified for that important station.
